Murders Probed

Pach 6-15-69

NEW YORK—Police say they have no evidence linking the killing of one black militant leader and the wounding of another. The attacks came within a week of each other.

In the latest case, Clarence Smith Jowars, described as the leader and organizer of a radical group, was killed by a fusillade of bullets fired into the lobby of a Harlem apartmement building.

Last Saturday, Charles 37X Kenyatta, leader of the machete-carrying Harlem

$100,935

Mau Maus, was shot while he was getting out of his car in the Bronx. He remains hospitalized.

Jowars, 41, was once a member of the Black Muslims but was ousted by the late Malcolm X. Malcolm later split with the Muslims before he was assassinated gunfire in 1965.

Two years after his split with the Muslims, Jowars was shot and left for dead on a Harlem street. He recovered and afterward promoted the belief among his followers that "nobody could kill me."